Ecotourism principles as a framework for sustainable development

Abstract: This paper explores the concept of ecotourism as a framework for sustainable development. It discusses the principles of ecotourism, including environmental conservation, community development, and education. The paper also examines the role of ecotourism in promoting sustainable development and the challenges it faces. The author argues that ecotourism can be a powerful tool for achieving sustainable development, provided that it is managed responsibly and equitably. The paper concludes with a call for greater support and investment in ecotourism as a means of promoting sustainable development.
