

Abstract

Supply chain performance measurement is considered now the key success of any organization, because measuring the organization's performance allowing it to know where the company is, and then managers can make improvements; Simply, if you cannot measure it you cannot improve it.

Ports play a vital role in the transportation movements of the world, either as a transit port, or a final port: So measuring its performance is not that easy fast.

Applying appropriate measures and indicators are the key success in the measurement process.